

Modern Scientific Community – The New Church & How Technology Is A Drug Part IV

---

VC vigilantcitizen.com/vc-community/modern-scientific-community-new-church-technology-drug-part-iv/

Previous Articles

Part I \(Modern Scientific Community – The New Church\)

Part II \(What Is The Scientific Method?\)

Part III \(Moral Lessons of The Scientific Machine & Political Agenda Behind The Scientific Method\)

Some Food For Thought Before We Start

There is a world in which science is used to progress mankind, where scientists are honest people in authentic pursuit of truth, whatever it maybe. They never lie, and they would never even think about putting their career in front the truthful scientific findings. Scientists in this world make the best of their morale compass, and would never agree to create technology that they themselves knew could potentially harm or even kill other human beings.

Then, there is another world. A world where science and technological advance are funded by banks and governments. These banks and governments are not run by honest, good people. Rather, they are run by sick psychopaths who enjoy nothing less but the outmost human suffering. The success of these banks and governments fulfilling their goals and wishes is further reinforced by the fact that in this world, scientists have ability to lie, deform data, and provide irrelevant information. In this world most scientists do put their career in front of the absolute truth. Not only that, but scientists also don't mind working on tools that not only can kill people, but have it as their only goal. Some of these tools not just kill people, but make them suffer aswell.

So, which of these two worlds does the reader think we live in? If it's the former, then I wonder what is the reader doing on this particular site? And I highly doubt that the reader has, or will have learned anything from my previous articles, or this one for that matter. If the reader believes we live in the latter of the worlds, then I invite to read on.

Definition Of A Drug And Why It Is Relevant

“A medicine or other substance which has a physiological effect when ingested or otherwise introduced into the body” – <http://www.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/english/drug>

Think of it like this. The human civilization is “the body”, “or other substance” is technology, and “a physiological effect” are the bigger changes in world history. Why this analogy is interesting, and why I named the title of this article as I did, is because when looked at like this, technology behaves much like a drug does.

– Every single milestone in technological development/improvement creates a surge for further developments/improvements, at the same time as it makes the past milestones “smaller” and “less efficient” in comparison. Much like a drug addict needs a bigger dose every time;

– Every single milestone is followed by radical increase in number of people dying during wartime; much like the higher dosage of a drug causes the drug addicts to loose higher amount of cells/parts of organs;

– Every single milestone is celebrated by a smaller amount of people than the milestone was used to kill, or effect negatively in some way. If not in numbers, then the milestone has far higher disadvantages than it has advantages. In other words, every technological improvement is far more efficient to be used against people, rather than it is to be used for the people.

– This one may be hard to swallow, but people who cheer the modern medical power of curing diseases, could be seen as a reaction of the drug addict; since he/she is feeling good, feeling young, closing eyes to the fact that the same drug is about to give a liver failure. In the same way we can cheer that radioactivity can be used to cure cancer, we have to close our eyes to the fact that it was researched as much as it was in order to kill millions of people in a blink of an eye.

The question is, would you rather see your mother, father, loved ones, die of diseases, but know that no such technology exists, that could potentially end life on this entire planet? In the end, is it worth it? Is it worth supporting this technology if it's just going to bring destruction? Why will it bring destruction? Because we live in the latter of the two worlds, remember? To be honest, to be frank, I don't know. I honestly don't know what my own answer should be to this question. As I wrote in the beginning of this series, I don't think that we should all go back to living in caves. But it's tough knowing that supporting scientific institutions helps the world elite to achieve suffering and death.

What Practical Effects Does This All Has?

Good question. Though I don't think it can be answered by theoretical inferring. I think it has to do more to do with practicality, looking around at what's happening in the world.

Iphones, computers, television sets, medicine, all these were created to control us, to brainwash us, to put surveillance over our private lives. And what do the people do? Like a dirty BDSM slave they come back and ask for more. I apologies for the graphic description, but it is the only way I can describe the coming generation, my generation. Just like a drug addict, they blind to the fact that the same technology, the same science, is used for surveillance, chemical warfare, and mass murder. And if I would even dare criticize science or technology, well, I hope the reader gets my point.

Ironic, isn't it? It started with a wheel, and will end with enslavement and/or destruction of mankind.

Last Words

The whole reason why I started writing this series: science is a tool of control. Better than religion. Why? Because science can actually produce tools that can physically force people under submission. Religion can't do that. In religion, you have to actually make someone believe what you're saying. In science you don't have to. Elite can just invent all the tools they need to run us, and the greatest of these tools is technology. Make us addictive to it, so that we ask for more.

Yes, I wrote this whole series, which now spans over almost 30 pages, just because I held a grudge against another article published on this same site, which describes how religion is a tool of control. Well, I wanted to show that science and technology are also tools of control, and much more efficient at that. I also wanted to show how scientific method can be used as a tool to fool people that Antichrist/Dajjal is "God", or whatever sinner plan the satanists have in mind. And throughout this series, I believe I did a good job.

Oh, and one more thing...

"Our Father in heaven, hallowed be Your name. Your kingdom come, Your will be done, on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors.

And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.”

... Now I think I'll move on to do esoteric analysis of games and TV-shows... Stay tuned!