- SIGAR released its second lessons learned report examining how the U.S. government developed and executed programs to build, train, advise, and equip the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces.
- SIGAR released its thirty-sixth Quarterly Report to Congress, highlighting the need to balance restraints on U.S. civilian movement required for security with the flexibility needed to manage and oversee the $119.7 billion dollar reconstruction effort.
- DOD may have spent up to $28 million more than needed to procure a proprietary camouflage pattern that may be inappropriate for Afghanistan. Changing the uniform could save U.S. taxpayers between $68.61 million and $72.21 million.

Stop II

SIGAR provides independent and objective oversight of the $117.26 billion the U.S. has provided to implement reconstruction programs in Afghanistan. SIGAR's core value of excellence, independence, and integrity guide its audits, investigations, and inspections. Read More
